With the ending of the crisis involving the American hostages, I would like to express the appreciation of my Agency and the American Government for the excellent cooperation afforded by the BBC Monitoring Service in helping report developments in the situation for more than 14 months.

As you are aware, the BBC Monitoring Service and our Foreign Broadcast Information Service have had a mutually beneficial relationship since 1941. Their close exchange of information from the world's media has helped both governments to keep abreast of current affairs throughout the globe. During the recent hostage crisis BBC covered Radio Tehran, which coupled with the efforts of the FBIS bureaus in the Middle East provided the U.S. Government with important, current information on events surrounding the Iranian situation.

We look forward to continuing this important collaboration in the years to come and offer our congratulations to the people at Caversham for a job well done.

Yours,

William J. Casey
